Ivan is having his wedding in the church, it's a dream wedding of his life, and he wants to make it perfect. However, what he hadn't taken into account is that he has invited a hundred people to the party. Instead of helping out with guests choosing the tables and seating arrangements, he hires a wedding planner. "Hi, Ivan, do you know you've invited a hundred people to the wedding?" a friendly voice asks me. I look surprised and a little embarrassed. "Of course, I did! I'm inviting my friends and my parents, and a lot of other people I know. Where is the problem?" I ask. I have started to feel impatient, to tell the truth. "Well, you might have forgotten about one thing, isn't it? Many guests, especially foreigners, don't know where they have to sit." "No, I've thought about that. We'll have to have translators. I've chosen the best people, and I'm ready to deal with them. It won't be a problem," Ivan assures me. When the wedding planner finishes talking, I get an idea. "I can help you out with guests choosing the tables and seating arrangements," I propose. "Well,
