Inferiorly based nasolabial flap in treating auriculotemporal-facial-sparing neurofibromatosis. Facial deformity in neurofibromatosis cannot be totally overcome by direct or secondary hair-bearing reconstructive techniques. This report presents the case of a patient with auriculotemporal-facial-sparing neurofibromatosis who underwent primary nasal reconstruction using an inferiorly based nasolabial flap. The purpose of the procedure was to create a skin flap that would reconstruct the external ear and auricle. This is the first report of the use of an inferiorly based flap for primary nasal reconstruction.

Q: Why does IE8 have sessionStorage? Some people seem to be saying that the IE8 has its own implementation of the sessionStorage, but if so why does it have its own implementation when it clearly doesn't provide any useful features to user? A: Because sites can serve different content to different browsers, it's possible to carry a unique identifier between the different browsers so that each one can have its own version of the same site. Unfortunately, the only way this can be managed by the client side is through Javascript. EDIT: As it's been suggested, sessionStorage is more suited to data that needs to be held between page refreshes. If you need to remember data between page refreshes you can use more strict, standard methods of storing data on the client side. Tell us some more!
